To whom it may concern:

During the fall of 2016 and the spring of 2017 I've had the pleasure of working with Thomas Chester in several capacities. He is a member of the Daedalus student organization here at ASU, as well as an undergraduate research student for a project that I mentored with him. Thomas will be enrolled in several courses that I teach over the upcoming year.

In his studies, I've found Thomas to be diligent, and insightful. He has an excellent mind for solving problems that he is given. Thomas is well-organized and diligent in mastering his course materials. I've found that Thomas is not afraid to tackle big tasks, and he has the tenacity to drive them to completion.

I believe Thomas will absolutely be an asset to any organization he chooses to become a part of. His talent as a developing engineer and approachability make him a pleasure to work with, and his diligence and tenacity make him an exceptional candidate.
